The only thing you can do is get a list of all your applications in the OS X Dock, which is like the Windows taskbar.. If you've recently converted over to a Mac or are being forced to use one against your will, you probably are used to the user-friendly environment of Windows and want to know the Mac equivalent of your favorite Windows program or feature, right?Well, luckily, recent Macs running the latest versions of OS X are not wildly different than the current versions of Windows.. It shows you currently open programs and you can add or remove icons for any other applications installed on your Mac.. Secondly, it shows you more useful stuff in the sidebar than Windows like shared servers, other computers, connected devices, etc.

Just to be precise, the Finder doesn't replace Windows Explorer; Windows Explorer was Microsoft's attempt to duplicate the functionality of the Finder.. To get all the applications as an icon on your Dock, open Finder and drag Applications from the sidebar and drop it onto the Dock.. That's pretty much what Microsoft did with Windows 8 and probably why everybody hated it.. Windows Explorer is pretty good, but I actually like the Mac Finder more For one thing, it allows you to have multiple tabs open in the same Finder window, making it easy to drag and drop files to a different location without having to open multiple Finder windows.. Windows Control Panel – Mac System PreferencesThe Control Panel is the place to go in Windows to control how Windows operates.. In this article, I'll go through all the Mac equivalents of Windows programs and hopefully you'll find using a Mac just as easy as a Windows machine.. The biggest difference in my opinion is the lack of any kind of Start button on OS X.. You can also go to System Preferences and adjust the settings for the Dock: allow it to remain visible at all times, increase the size, change the position on the screen, etc.. Windows Explorer – Mac FinderNext up is Windows Explorer The Mac equivalent is the Finder.. The recycle bin is also located on the Dock and in order to eject any device connected to your Mac, you drag and drop it into the trash. 0041d406d9 Bliss 2 Bold Font Download
